A World of Backpacking is run by Tine, a biologist with a passion for trekking, nature, animals, food and culture. Tine has travelled to more than 30 countries all over the world, most of them as a solo traveler. This expertise in solo traveling makes A World of Backpacking the leading travel blog in Denmark within this niche. The blog gives you a realistic view of how it is to travel as a female solo backpacker and which challenges and unique experiences this kind of travel form can lead to, like making new friends across borders, cultures and interests.

Afterglobe is run by the couple Anders and Laura, who live in Billund, near an international airport of course. The primary focus of the blog is to show that you can travel on a small budget without compromising with the quality. Since 2013 Anders and Laura have shared their food experiences, travel budgets, guides, tips and photos from different destinations across the world. Until now they have travelled as a couple, but that has changed by summer 2018 when welcomed a little globetrotter into the family, who they are very excited to be able to show around the big world.

Cammi.dk is run by Camilla, who is based in Amsterdam. Cammi.DK targets young women, who dream about exploring the world. On Cammi.DK the goal is to inspire the readers to visit more untraditional destinations, while still allowing yourself to check off a few bullets from the endless bucket list. Camilla has lived in Hong Kong, the US and now in Amsterdam. With this insider knowledge her aim is to guide the readers in avoiding tourist traps and instead search for authentic travel experiences all around the world, either through unique hotels, local restaurants or hidden corners around popular cities.

OnTrip.dk is run by the couple Annette and Tore. OnTrip.dk targets the 40+ travellers, who wish to travel the world on their own. On the blog you can find tips, reviews, travel routes and inspiration for the next adventure. The diversity on the blog reflects different ways to travel like staying at a 5 star hotel or in a bed and breakfast. Annette and Tore have visited 60 countries on six continents and love roadtrips, TV towers, USA and beautiful nature. They share their honest opinion about their experiences in personal columns on their blog.
